

"You can't judge a book by its cover". Most of us have heard this saying, yet how many of us follow this advice. On the internet and in the media, in the papers and on TV, we are surrounded by pictures of the glamorous and the beautiful, the fit and fabulous. In such an image driven society, it is hardly surprising that we are concerned with the impact of our appearance over the effect of our actions. In everything from friends and pop-stars to toys and vegetables, we make choices based on looks with little thought for what lies beneath. But should we allow ourselves to make judgements that are simply skin deep? After all, is the greenest apple always the tastiest? Perhaps it is time we opened the book.

Every day, millions of children spend up to 8 hours in school. They sit at their desks, they listen to their teachers, they concentrate on their work. In some of these schools, they have to do this in clothes that are uncomfortable, outdated and impractical. Why do we force children to dress identically? Are we afraid that if they express themselves they will stop listening? Is individuality so threatening it has to be hidden? Surely you agree that our children have a right to be different! We are all proud to be part of a world that celebrates diversity and difference; the time has come to banish school uniforms to the history books.

I have been attending this school since I was 5 years old: I learned to read at this school, I lost my first tooth at this school and I have grown into a young adult at this school. I passionately believe in this school and all it does, and want to be a part of its future. Yet however amazing our school is, I still think that there is still room for improvement. Together we could make some simple changes that would benefit us all.

When you get dog mess on your shoes, everyone knows about it. The smell is horrid; it makes you feel dirty and ashamed, as if everyone is looking at you. It is unhygienic, difficult to remove and lingers for days. Yet every day in our school children are having to leave their shoes outside and walk barefoot to class because of the selfishness of dog owners. This must stop.
